We're the USA's 39th Most Livable City

24/7 Wall Street Journal:

"You're all to be congratulated for choosing to live in such desirable place. 24/7 Wall Street Journal confirms your choice."

Based on our local environment, leisure services, economy, education, health, demography, crime, housing and infrastructure, they've ranked Palm Coast as the 39th most livable city in the entire United States.

Much of this success can be attributed to City Council's Prosperity 2021 vision to grow the local economy. Their plan directs attention to updating infrastructure, beautifying neighborhoods, attracting sports tourism and providing responsive code enforcement.

Council also established a Business Assistance Center, partnering with the University of Central Florida's Small Business Development Center, to equip local businesses with resources to build a strong, reliable customer base.

24/7 Wall Street Journal's recognition of Palm Coast's livability is also the result of Prosperity 2021's strategy to develop an attractive city that values quality of life.

Palm Coast has constructed 125+ miles of hiking/biking trails. We've preserved acres of conservation areas for unparalleled peace and built new parks for recreation.

We've upgraded drainage, widened roads and welcomed unique sports tournaments. We value a cleaner environment, providing expansive recycling and household hazardous waste collection.

Our City's efforts symbolize the sustainability and beauty of Palm Coast as an enviable community where people are proud to live.

People are now moving here from more places and are showing more interest in our City. Instead of others asking us, "Where is Palm Coast?" they're now saying,

"You're lucky - you live in Palm Coast!"

Palm Coast was listed as No. 39 on the most livable cities list published on usatoday.com Oct. 13. The list was compiled by USA Today partner 24/7 Wall Street, which analyzed a list of approximately 590 cities that were listed in U.S. Census Bureau records as having populations of more than 65,000 in 2016.

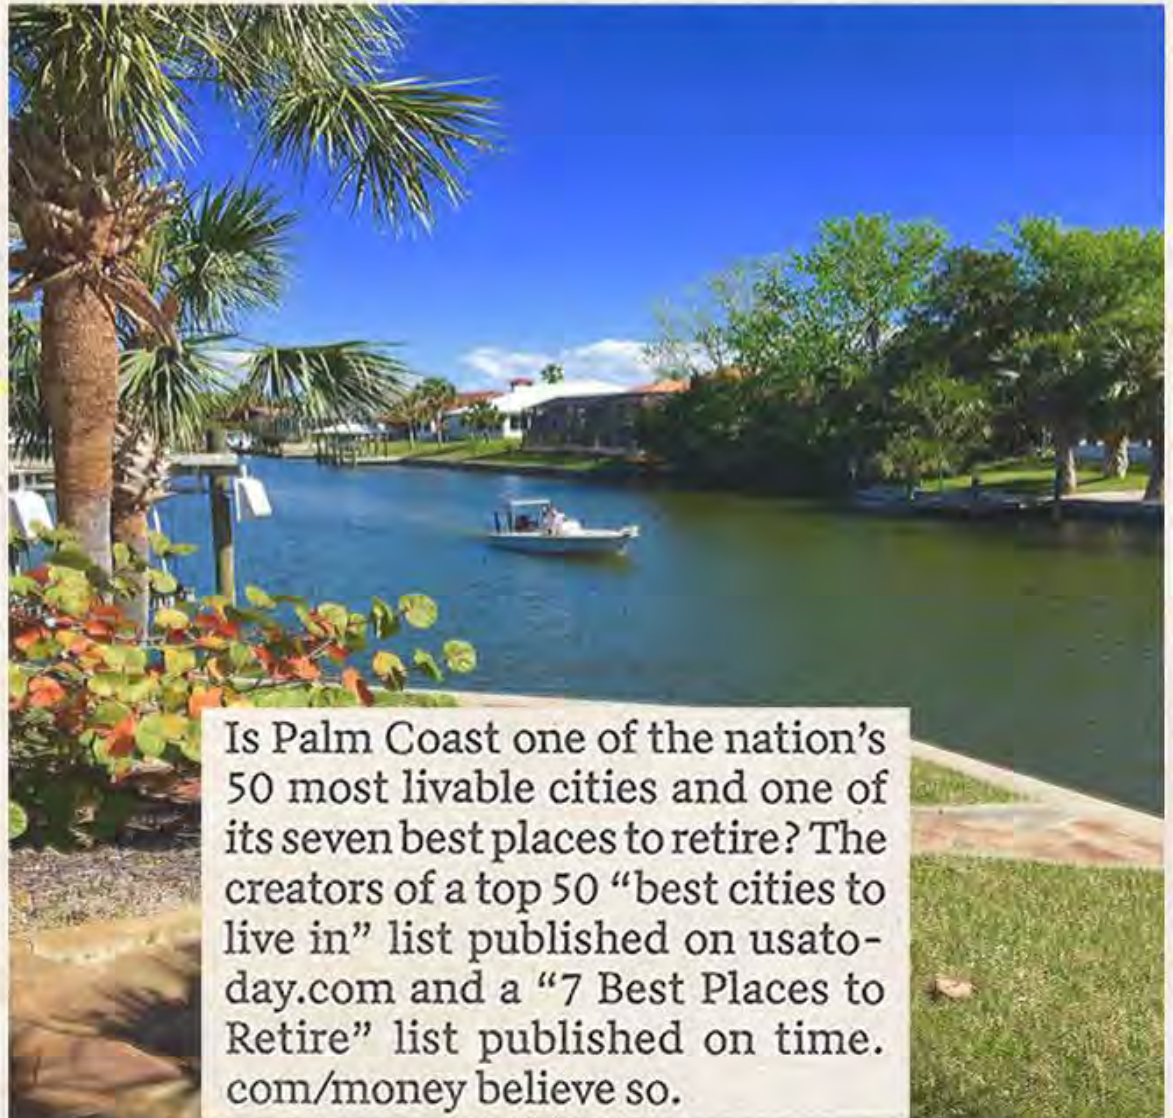

On the time.com list of best places to retire, published Oct. 16, Palm Coast was listed as "best for water-lovers."

"It demonstrates why we make continual investments in our quality of life to improve opportunities and offerings for our residents to enjoy Palm Coast each and every day," Palm Coast Mayor Melissa Holland said after an Oct. 17 City Council meeting. "I'm very proud of being recognized as one of the top cities, and we're going to continue to follow through on our vision that we established many years ago, and keep up the momentum."

The 24/7 Wall Street profile of Palm Coast cited the city's low poverty rate, low cost of housing and low crime rate as reasons for its inclusion.

"Though incomes are lower on average in Palm Coast, a large share of the population appears to live relatively comfortably as comparatively few residents face serious financial hardship," the 24/7 Wall Street profile states. "Only 11.7% of Palm Coast residents live in poverty, below the statewide and nationwide poverty rates of 14.7% and 14.0%, respectively."

and The Villages. The No. 1 city on the list is Carmel, Indiana.

A city's overall ranking on the top 50 was based on ratings in nine categories: economy, crime, education, demography, environment, housing, leisure, health and infrastructure, according to 24/7 Wall Street's explanation of its methodology. Those were compiled with numeric data such as housing prices, information pulled from the FBI's Uniform Crime Report and area schools' standardized test scores. See the full story at usat.ly/2yk9Tj0.

Palm Coast's profile on the list of seven best places to retire also mentions the city's low housing cost, but focuses on its amenities.

"Located on the Sunshine State's east coast between St. Augustine and Daytona Beach, Palm Coast delivers everything water-seeking retirees could want," the time.com/money story states. The profile goes on to mention the city's fresh and saltwater canal network, proximity to the Intracoastal, and boating and fishing opportunities.

The time.com/money story's rankings used calculations from 70 forms of data in categories ranging from weather to crime to housing cost, plus data from reporters who researched locations and interviewed residents. View the story at ti.me/2xjsibM.

Orlando

The city is widely known for the Disney World theme park, including the EPCOT Center and Animal Kingdom. The Disney World Resort is in the Reedy Creek Improvement District. The other tourist attractions include Sea World, Universal Studios Florida, Universal Orlando Resort and the World's Largest McDonald's. Downtown Orlando, also, attracts a considerable number of tourists. Gatorland is one of the oldest attractions in the area. Orlando is home to the University of Central Florida, which is the second largest university in Florida.

Saint Augustine

St. Augustine is the USA's oldest city. It is also considered to be one of the most charming and quaint cities in Florida. St. Augustine has a beautiful historic district with cobblestone streets, cafes, bars, unique shops and bed and breakfast hotels. If you have a passion for antiques, hand crafted gifts, blown glass, arts and crafts, fine arts, or handmade chocolates, and if you are shopping for clothes, shoes, or household goods, or perhaps finding unique and unusual gifts from around the world, St. Augustine has it all.

Palm Coast. Location, location, location!

Located in Northeast Florida, the City of Palm Coast is halfway between St. Augustine and Daytona Beach – and about 70 miles from both the Jacksonville and Orlando metropolitan areas. Palm Coast's Interstate 95 Exit 284 (at State Road 100) is the closest I-95 exit to the beach from Maine to Miami. Palm Coast covers approximately 60 square miles and is situated on 70 miles of saltwater and freshwater canals and the Intracoastal Waterway.

Daytona Beach

Daytona Beach, famous as the "World Center of Racing" and home of NASCAR, is part of the East Central Florida greater metropolitan area. Daytona Beach is the best known of the seven area communities. The main artery that passes by the racetrack was even renamed from "Volusia Avenue" to "International Speedway Boulevard."

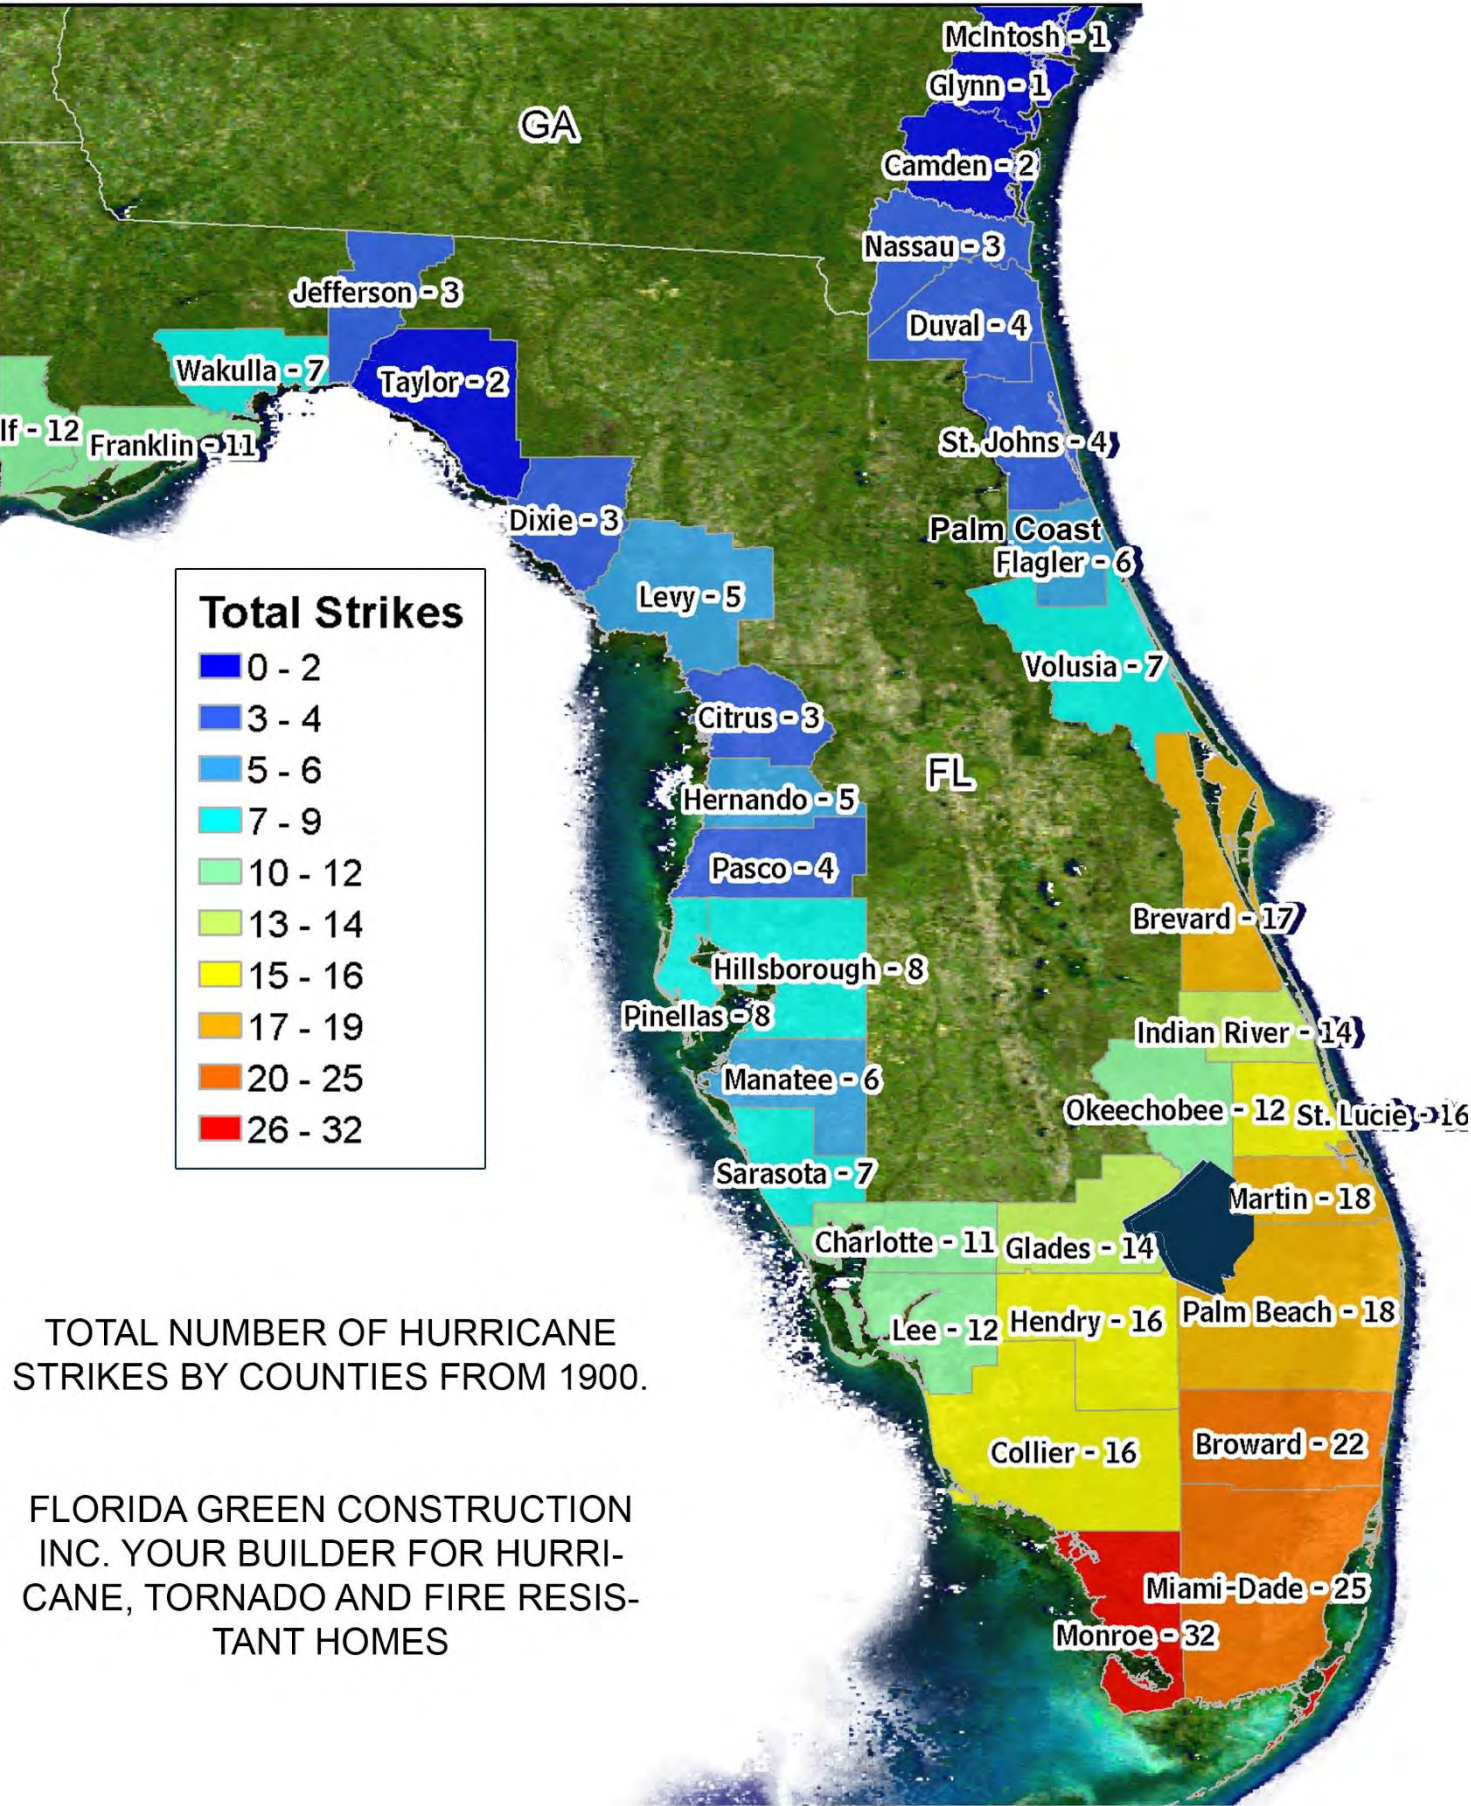

Although the wide 23-mile stretch of white sandy beach is still the biggest attraction here, with over 8 million visitors flocking to the area every year, the metro area is rapidly changing from event Mecca to family oriented resort destination. Historical sites like the Main Street Pier, the Oceanfront Boardwalk and the Clock tower in Oceanfront Park add to the appeal of this exciting city.

There are also tons of entertainment and shopping centers in the area -- be sure to buy souvenirs for the people back home, because they'll want some of the nice items you can pick up in Daytona Beach, for certain!
